

Objective

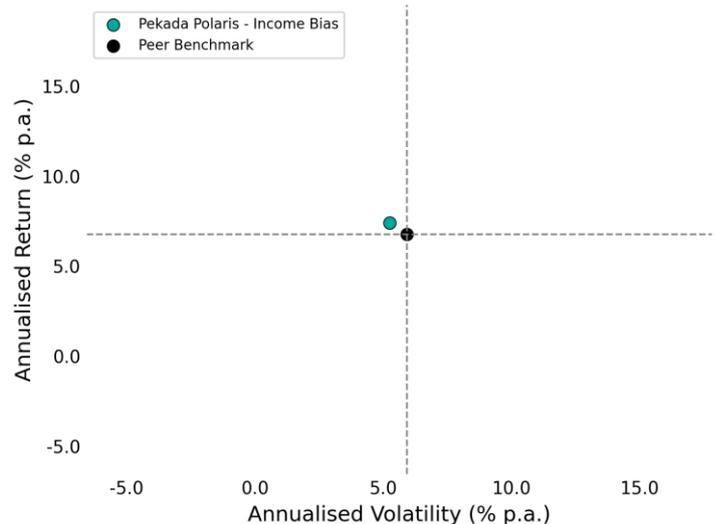

The Model aims to outperform the Bloomberg AusBond Bank Bill Index +3%, after fees and costs, over rolling 7-year periods.

Fund Description

The Pekada Polaris – Income Bias Portfolio (the Model) is built and monitored using deep fundamental research on both asset allocation and fund manager selection. Asset allocation considerations include long term forecast returns for each asset class, as well as volatility and correlation. We then find exceptional managers that we believe work together to deliver on the Model’s objectives. The composition of the Model will change from time to time, based on economic and market conditions, ongoing research, as well as a result of continuous monitoring of both current and potential fund managers.

Market Commentary

It has been an intriguing start to 2026 with geopolitical tensions in Venezuela, Greenland and Iran dominating the headlines. The impacts of this were reflected in a weaker US dollar, which had a significant impact on the returns of Australian investors as the Australian dollar (AUD) rose strongly to close the month just below 70 US cents. Gold and other precious metals also benefited, before falling into month-end following the announcement that Kevin Warsh is to be the next Chairman of the US Federal Reserve (Fed).

Despite the headlines, most Global Equity markets were reasonably resilient from a local currency perspective, although after accounting for the strength in the AUD, the Global Equity benchmark was down -2% through January. Emerging Markets were the standout and performed particularly well, rising 3.6% as they were seen as key beneficiaries of the weaker US dollar. Australian shares also saw a good start to the year with the ASX 200 rising 1.8%, and helped retrace some of the weaker performance witnessed at the end of last year. Much of this result was driven by the strength in the Materials sector, with this helping to drive a strong performance from many Australian small-cap names.

Across Fixed Income markets, the focus remained firmly on the actions of central banks. In the US, the Fed paused its easing cycle, holding rates for the first time in a number of meetings. This was widely expected as inflation has again started to re-surface, while the US economy looks to be in increasingly good health. Domestically, the focus was on the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) and the increasing likelihood it would look to increase interest rates at its February meeting. This saw longer-dated bonds under pressure, while short-dated, high-quality Australian credit continues to benefit from the higher yields now on offer.

Portfolio Commentary

The Model returned +0.72% in January, outperforming the peer group benchmark by +0.18%. The result was driven by the continued strong results from its Alternative Equities, as well as its hedged Global Infrastructure, Property and Equity holdings.

The L1 Capital Long Short Fund (+9.27%) continued its strong performance of the last 12 months, while the Model's Global Infrastructure and Property holdings also had good months, with the Clearbridge RARE Infrastructure Income (Hedged) Fund and the Resolution Capital Global Property Securities Fund both returning +4.05% and +3.24% respectively. Across the Global Equity holdings, outcomes were widely divergent, with the hedged exposures significantly outperforming their unhedged peers as the Australian dollar rose strongly through January. The best performer over the month was the RQI Global Value (Hedged) Fund (+3.78%), given its strong value focus.

Australian Equities also saw a solid month, with the Materials and Banking sectors driving performance. The Ausbil Dividend Income Fund (+2.30%) was the best performer given its overweight exposure to Materials, helping it to outperform the +1.78% rise in the ASX 200. Australian property was softer, reflecting a market repricing toward higher interest rates, which saw the Vanguard Australian Property Securities Index Fund fall -2.72%.

Across the Model's more defensive holdings, the shorter maturity Australian Credit managers were the best performers, continuing to benefit from the higher prevailing yields across the Alexander, Perpetual and Realm strategies. The Australian and Global fixed income strategies saw a weaker month, as long-duration bond yields were more volatile, seeing them slightly underperform their benchmarks.
