MARKET REVIEW

Global economic growth remained steady during the third quarter of 2026 despite ongoing international tensions and continued high oil prices. However, rising energy costs began feeding into broader consumer prices, pushing inflation higher. In response, central banks in the US, Australia, Europe and Japan resumed raising interest rates.

In the US, the Federal Reserve increased interest rates for the first time since 2023, taking its target range to 3.75% to 4%, as Chair Warsh reinforced the bank's focus on keeping inflation under control. Concerns about inflation and government budget deficits pushed the yield on 10-year US government bonds above 5%. In Australia, annual inflation rose to 4% in August, while the underlying measure of inflation came in at 3.6%. Combined with higher household energy bills and fuel costs, this prompted the Reserve Bank of Australia to lift the cash rate by 0.25% in late September to 4.6%. This was its fourth increase this year and the highest level since October 2011.

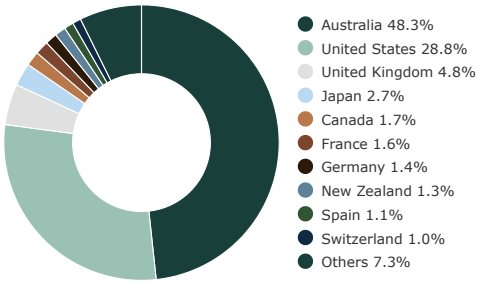

Share markets remained relatively resilient despite higher interest rates, supported by strong company profits and continued spending on artificial intelligence (AI). The US share market, measured by the S&P 500, rose 2.0% over the quarter, led by larger growth-focused companies, with support also coming from financial, industrial and healthcare businesses. Smaller US companies, however, fell 7.5%. Australian shares finished the quarter largely unchanged, as declines in technology, retail and property-related companies offset gains in energy and healthcare stocks. Australian technology shares are now down more than 20.0% so far this year. Other markets were weaker, particularly emerging markets, which were held back by a 12.5% fall in Chinese shares.

MARKET OUTLOOK

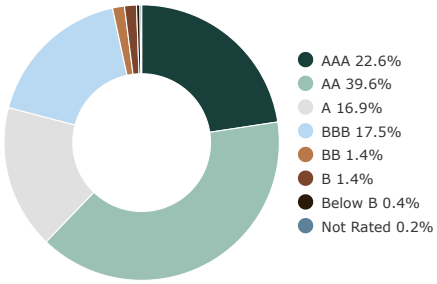

We expect higher interest rates and energy costs to put more pressure on the economy over the coming months. The full effect of recent and expected interest rate rises takes time to be felt, and higher borrowing costs are likely to reduce business spending, slow household spending, and weaken job growth. In addition, oil prices have remained high and, while they have not yet stopped economic growth, they are expected to become a bigger burden by reducing the money households have left to spend and increasing costs for businesses. Together, higher borrowing costs and fuel prices should slow the strong growth seen so far and reduce overall economic growth across developed countries.

There are likely to be ongoing challenges between investing in artificial intelligence (AI) and seeing meaningful benefits from it. Continued spending by companies on AI supports efficiency improvements and the earnings of some of the largest companies. However, businesses must manage these investment costs alongside ongoing increases in the price of goods and higher energy costs. Profits are likely to come under pressure for many companies, except those that can successfully pass higher costs on to customers or are directly benefiting from AI, which could leave share market valuations more exposed to higher interest rates.

PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

The Pekada Polaris ESG Ranked Portfolio returned -0.17% over the quarter and 3.83% over the 12 months to September 2026.

International Shares was a key contributor to performance over the quarter, with the Nanuk New World Fund (Currency Hedged) returning 2.72%. Global share markets held up well over the quarter, supported by strong business spending on artificial intelligence (AI) and solid company profits. Australian Shares also contributed positively, with the Schroder Australian Equity Fund returning 4.96%. This was a pleasing result, given the broader Australian share market finished the quarter broadly unchanged.

On the downside, Listed Property weighed on returns, with the Pengana High Conviction Property Securities Fund the key detractor over the quarter. Property companies were among the weaker parts of the Australian share market, as rising interest rates weighed on the sector.

International Fixed Interest detracted from performance, with the PIMCO ESG Global Bond Fund returning -3.42% over the quarter. Concerns about rising inflation pushed the interest rate on 10-year US government bonds above 5.00%, which weighed on bond prices.

Overall, the portfolio remains well-diversified and positioned to navigate changing market conditions.

PORTFOLIO CHANGES

Changes were made to the Pekada Polaris ESG portfolio during the quarter.

The Betashares Australian Sustainability Leaders ETF (FAIR) excludes any company linked to fossil fuel financing. As a result, FAIR holds none of Australia's major banks and very little in the Materials sector, reflecting its focus on lowering carbon emissions. Because Financials and Materials make up a large part of the Australian Share market, FAIR's returns can differ significantly from the broader market.

To simplify the portfolio and reduce this performance risk, FAIR was exited. The proceeds were reallocated to the portfolio's two existing Australian share managers: the Schroder Australian Equity Fund and the Pendal Horizon Sustainable Australian Share Fund. Both funds invest more broadly across sectors and companies, while still applying strong ESG screening to exclude harmful business activities. This change reduces the risk without materially changing the portfolio's overall ESG profile.

The Committee also increased the portfolio's exposure to global bonds by topping up the PIMCO ESG Global Bond Fund. Government bond yields are currently at historically high levels, making owning bonds more attractive now than in recent years. PIMCO was chosen for its strength in actively managing interest rate risk. This change also brings the portfolio's global bonds allocation closer to its target weighting, improving diversification across its defensive assets.
